Accounts that seem to work together

Group G1 has 28 accounts that seem to work together. Why we think so: they posted the same or almost the same words; their accounts were made around the same time; they posted within minutes of each other; they keep sharing and boosting each other's posts. This is a clue, not proof: real friends or fans can also look alike.
Group G2 has 6 accounts that seem to work together. Why we think so: they keep sharing and boosting each other's posts; they posted within minutes of each other. This is a clue, not proof: real friends or fans can also look alike.
Group G3 has 5 accounts that seem to work together. Why we think so: they posted the same or almost the same words; they posted within minutes of each other. This is a clue, not proof: real friends or fans can also look alike.

How to read this: groups of accounts that behave alike are a lead for a human to check, not proof that anything is fake. Figures come from the public posts that could be collected for this topic and these dates; they may not cover everything said online. The full detail is in report.html, results.json and the CSV files.
